FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

Boston Sports U18 and the Bay State Games Team Up to find Youth Bloggers for the 2009 Summer Games

Boston, Ma– April 13, 2009 – Local sports website www.bostonsportsu18.com and the Bay State Games are looking for youth bloggers who can report on the 2009 Summer Games.

Ideally, bloggers should be between the ages of 10 and 17 and be passionate about sports and journalism. Bloggers will report on a variety of sports and have unique access to players, coaches and Bay State Games personnel. No experience is necessary. Anyone interested should e-mail Mike Winn at info@bostonsportsu18.com.

www.bostonsportsu18.com is a website that will report on all of the Boston Sports teams and feature training tips, nutrition tips, pictures and videos, high school reports, interviews with athletes, product reviews and much more. Boston Sports U18 is written “by kids, for kids” with most bloggers under the age of 18.

“I played in the Bay State Games in 1984 and it is unbelievable to see the growth they have enjoyed,” said Boston Sports U18 President Mike Winn. “It will be exciting for bloggers to report on the Games this summer for Boston Sports U18.”

In 2009, the Bay State Games (www.baystategames.org) will celebrate its 28th year of competition. From a modest beginning of four sports and 300 athletes, the Summer and Winter Games have grown to include in excess of 8,000 athletes in 27 different sports from more than 300 Massachusetts cities and towns. Each sport is organized according to national governing body rules. Age and skill divisions have been created to allow medal opportunities for a broad range of athletes.

“With 24 different sports taking place over a two week period, the Bay State Summer Games give a young journalist the opportunity to cover a wide range of sports in a fast-paced setting,” explained Peter Cohenno, Director of Communications for the Bay State Games.
